Dr. G. Kirby Collier, M.D.

Dr. G. Kirby Collier, a well-known physician from Rochester, New York, was one of A.A.’s earliest admirers in the psychiatric profession. He played a prominent role in helping to bring Alcoholics Anonymous to Rochester, New York. Having heard of A.A.’s success, Dr. Collier traveled to New York City in December of 1941 to investigate. During his visit, he met with Bill W. and attended meetings. He received literature and it was suggested that he introduce his alcoholic patients to the program.

Being convinced of the program’s merits, he took Bill W.’s suggestion and met with three of his alcoholic patients in April 1942. Dr. Collier, believing it was best that they run their own meetings, gave the alcoholics the literature and explained the basics, then “threw them overboard,” as he put it. Within several weeks the trio of alcoholics had grown to six. Initially they met in the home of one of the members, then settled on renting a room in the Seneca Hotel, effectively starting the Seneca Group, one of the first A.A. groups in Rochester, in July 1942. This year the Seneca Group will celebrate its 71st anniversary.

Dr. Collier remained in touch with Bill and invited him to speak on several occasions. In May of 1944, Dr. Collier invited Bill to speak at the American Psychiatric Association’s annual meeting. He wrote: “Psychiatry has come to some recognition of the work of A.A. Your association with the psychiatric group, I feel, should be enlarged. Of course, there are a large group of psychiatrists who are not familiar with the work of A.A. and I do feel that your appearance before this group would be of tremendous value.”

Bill recalled in Alcoholics Anonymous Comes of Age (pp. 2-3), “It was Dr. Tiebout, helped by Dr. Kirby Collier of Rochester and Dwight Anderson of New York, who persuaded the Medical Society of the State of New York in 1944 and later the American Psychiatric Association in 1949 to let me, a layman, read papers about A.A. at their annual gatherings, thus hastening the acceptance of the then little-known A.A. by physicians all over the globe.”

Excerpts of Bill’s talk were published in a pamphlet, “Medicine Looks at Alcoholics Anonymous.” Published shortly after the 1944 talk, were comments made by Dr. Collier, Dr. Foster Kennedy, and Dr. Harry Tiebout. The paper would also be printed in the New York State Journal of Medicine. Dr. Collier’s comments included: “Realizing how ineffectual our efforts in the treatment of the chronic alcoholic through the usually accepted psychiatric procedures were was my reason for investigating Alcoholics Anonymous. With one of their members I was privileged to attend a meeting in New York and had the opportunity of discussing their philosophy with Mr. W. First, I was impressed with the honesty and sincerity of those members I met, and, second, with the broad socio-religious background and its psychiatric implications — chiefly a man’s recognition of self, his abilities as well as his inefficiencies and that intangible power which all mankind recognizes, whether he acknowledges it or not. Upon my return home, I asked three chronic alcoholics, all of twenty to twenty-five years’ duration, to organize a group, after going over the situation with them as I understood it. These three contacted others and held their first meeting in the small apartment of one. Growing, they approached me for a place to meet. We eliminated the Y.M.C.A., Public Library, church halls, or parish houses for obvious reasons, and at last advised a room in one of our large centrally located hotels. This has worked out nicely and meetings are held each Sunday afternoon and Wednesday evening. From the original group of three, contacts have been made with over 500.”

Also at Dr. Collier’s invitation, Bill participated in an alcoholism symposium at the American Psychiatric Association Annual Meeting in Montreal, May 1949. His address marked the acceptance of A.A. by yet another major American medical organization. Bill’s address is titled “The Society of Alcoholics Anonymous.” Excerpts of this address can be found in the pamphlet, “Three Talks to Medical Societies by Bill W.”

What Dr. Collier has meant to A.A. can be best summed up by Bill himself. In a letter to his widow on hearing of the doctor’s passing, he wrote: “When this society of ours was young, and very uncertain in its struggle for survival, the doctor stood up before all the physicians of the world, and spoke the simple truth that we have come to recognize. We will always be grateful to the memory of Dr. G. Kirby Collier.”
greatest and best friends that we have ever had. His name will always be a shining mark in the annals of Alcoholics Anonymous.”

New information on Dr. Collier’s contribution to A.A. has recently been revealed in letters and correspondence donated to the Rochester Intergroup Archives by his grandchildren. The donation consisted of the Doctor’s personal scrapbook containing photographs, correspondence, and personal memorabilia highlighting his long career. The Dr. G. Kirby Collier collection is part of the Rochester Intergroup Archives collection that is housed at the Rochester Medical Museum and Archives, in Rochester, New York. Archival Exhibit — A Guide

One of the main functions of an archives is to make available the records it collects and preserves. Putting material on display in an exhibition can be an excellent way to accomplish this task. Exhibits not only educate the public on the subject at hand, but also increase interest in and inform visitors of the work of archivists. This article is an attempt to provide some basic principles in developing an exhibition.

The first step in creating an exhibit is to determine the subject you wish to build upon. It is important that the exhibition have a clear theme, and that it tells a story with a strong narrative. This is not to say that an exhibit must be extensive; on the contrary, an exhibit can consist of only a few items. However, it is important that the items all revolve around a common theme. If you have difficulty deciding upon a subject, consider the content of your archival collections. What do you specialize in? Are there any individuals or events you have a great deal of information about? What are the strengths of your archives? Determining this will probably supply you with ideas for more than one exhibit. You can also plan exhibits around anniversaries or special occasions. For example, here at the G.S.O. Archives, we create exhibits about the General Service Conference, the International Convention, the World Service Meeting, and the Founders’ Day Anniversary, around the time when those events are held. You can also use the interests of your audience as a guide to developing your exhibit. If you are to have visitors with a common background, or if you know that members in your vicinity are interested in a certain topic, you can plan accordingly.

After choosing a subject for your exhibition, you can pick items to put on display. Try to select pieces that are both historically significant and visually appealing. Remember that practically any item can be used as an exhibit, including photographs, published works, manuscripts (unpublished writings), artifacts, and more. However, it is necessary to ensure that the items you choose relate to the subject of the exhibition and to one another. As archivists for A.A., it is also important to protect the anonymity and confidentiality of members. Make sure that you do not identify members in text or image. Also, ensure that no confidential information, such as addresses and telephone numbers, are on display. As with other events in A.A., it is strongly recommended that your exhibit adheres to the Twelve Traditions, particularly those pertaining to anonymity. Make sure to listen to the group conscience concerning the design and implementation of your exhibit. Yet, at the same time, you should ensure that archival standards are maintained to the best of your ability in every aspect of your exhibit. Bear in mind that you are, essentially, telling a story, and make sure that the items you select contribute to it. It is of paramount importance that the context of the materials be evident. Supply background information by means of the exhibit labels you write, and make sure that the relationship between the items and the subject is understood. It is also a good idea to use a variety of items, and to add depth to the exhibit by the use of three-dimensional pieces.

There are also some things to avoid when constructing an exhibit. Make sure that the items are not in direct sunlight, and attempt to place them in an area with consistent levels of heat and humidity. Also, try to avoid using items which are in poor condition. Not only is this unsightly, but being on display contributes to further deterioration of the material. It is entirely acceptable to use a reproduction or facsimile of an item in poor condition rather than the original, so long as you identify it as a copy.

Writing exhibit labels is an important step in putting together an exhibit and should not be dismissed as a trivial task. Labels must be clearly written and supply any and all necessary information in the fewest words. In essence, there are two types of exhibit labels. The first provides general information on the exhibit as a whole. They provide contextual information, including historical or biographical notes, and supply information common to a group of items. The other type of label is for individual exhibit pieces. They are typically short, providing bits of data on a single item. Remember that exhibits are largely visual, and try to limit the number of words used in your labels. This is especially important if the items you are exhibiting have a lot of text which visitors will need to read. Generally, it is a good idea to put basic information, like the title of a document, in a larger type face, and to use smaller type for more detailed notes. This enables visitors to focus their attention on information which they are interested in, permitting them to absorb as much of the exhibit as they wish. Keep in mind that those viewing the exhibition may have little or no understanding of the subject, and that you will probably have to supply background and contextual information for their benefit.

One of the more difficult aspects of creating an exhibit is acquiring the proper equipment for it. It is important to consider the type and extent of the exhibits you are likely to conduct, and to purchase equipment which is suitable for your needs. There are a wide variety of items to choose from, including exhibit cases, easels, frames, cradles, and much more. At the very least you will need an exhibit case which is built to archival or museum standards. The other tools and accessories you get will vary depending on your needs. Try to acquire items which are multipurpose, so they can be reused in various ways through countless exhibits. For instance, archival quality foam board can be used to hold various flat items, like letters or postcards, and can be propped up to display items at angles, adding dimension to your exhibit. A good idea is to examine the catalog of an archival supplier, and see what is available that may be useful to you. Also, check your local craft store, as they sometimes carry archival safe materials.

With all the pieces in your exhibit now in place, the only task which remains is to publicize your work. If your district or area has a newsletter, try to have them include a brief note about your exhibit. Invite members to see what you have put together, and encourage them to bring others with them. In short order, the educational value of exhibitions will be clearly apparent to you and your audience, and you will be well prepared to host new exhibitions in the future.

In the spring of 1944 a small group of A.A. members in the New York City area got together to produce a monthly publication. Titled the AA Grapevine, it began as a local venture, distributed to members in the New York City area as a means of communication to members outside of their own groups. The original founders described in the first issue as the “six ink-stained wretches,” were an all-volunteer staff. Bill W. was a supporter of the AA Grapevine from the beginning. One of the original founders, Lois K., recounted in the June 1954 issue, that upon being told of the idea, Bill W. responded “Go to it, and blessings on you.” Work on the first issue began soon after and was published in June 1944.

The publication was meant to foster understanding between groups in the area. However, when the first issue was sent to local group secretaries all over the United States, requests for subscriptions soon followed. A copy of each issue was also mailed to service men and women stationed overseas in efforts to provide contact to A.A. members so far away from meetings. As one A.A. service men explained in the June 1954 issue “I knew that no matter where I went, my AA Grapevine would sooner or later catch up with me. And I knew, too, that in its pages I would find the help I needed.”

The AA Grapevine became the national monthly journal of A.A. by the second year of publication. At this time, it was enthusiastically agreed upon by A.A. members, as well as Bill W. and Dr. Bob, that the AA Grapevine should be A.A.’s principle monthly publication.

June 1944 marked a major turning point in A.A. history. With the release of the first issue of the AA Grapevine, A.A. members from different areas had a way of communicating with each other. In its almost 70 year history, the Grapevine has been a platform for many principles of A.A. It was in the April 1946 issue that Bill W. first presented the idea of the Twelve Traditions in an article titled “Twelve Suggested Points for A.A. Tradition.” The A.A. Preamble, written by an early Grapevine editor, appeared in the June 1947 issue. Bill W. also used the Grapevine to document the formation of A.A.’s spiritual principles of Recovery, Unity and Service. La Vinã, a bimonthly Spanish-language magazine, was first published in 1996 to meet the needs of the growing Spanish-speaking membership of A.A.

In 1986 a General Service Conference Advisory Action recognized the AA Grapevine as the International Journal of Alcoholics Anonymous.
‘What Would the Master Do?’

One of the frequent inquiries we receive in the Archive regards the story behind the statement, “I am the victim of another addiction even worse stigmatized than alcoholism…” as related in the Third Tradition, (Twelve Steps and Twelve Traditions, pp. 142-43).

For many years we did not know the details behind this reference. Then it was discovered that the story of the “double stigma” was enlarged upon by Bill W. in a talk he gave at the 1968 General Service Conference.

“…The group conscience began to say to us, ‘The common welfare comes first. We do not have these biases [of power, prestige, or money]. Let us take thought for the general welfare, and after that, let’s see where the leadership stands.’ So we turn up as leaders who have not power in the usual sense, not prestige in the usual sense. We turn up as genuine servants with a discretion from the group conscience to act for them. And that’s our state here. The general welfare comes first.

“Take another which at first glance might seem a little remote. At about year two, of the Akron group, a poor devil came to Dr. Bob in a grievous state. He could qualify as an alcoholic, all right. And then he said, ‘Dr. Bob, I’ve got a real problem to pose you. I don’t know if I could join A.A., because I’m a sex deviate.’ Well, that had to go out to the group conscience, you know. Up to then it was supposed that any society could say who was going to join it.

“And pretty soon the group conscience began to seethe and boil, and it boiled over. And, ‘Under no circumstances could we have such a peril, and such a disgrace, among us,’ said a great many.

“And you know, right then our destiny hung on a razor edge over this single case. In other words, would there be rules that could exclude so-called undesirability? And that caused us in the time and for quite a time, respecting this single case, to ponder, what is the more important: the reputation that we shall have? What people shall think? Or is it our character? And who are we, considering our records? Alcoholism is quite as unlovely. Who are we to deny a man his opportunity? Any man, or woman?

“And finally the day of resolution came. And a bunch were sitting in Dr. Bob’s living room, arguing, ‘What to do?’ Whereupon, dear old Bob looked around and blandly said, ‘Isn’t it time, folks, to ask ourselves, what would the Master do in a situation like this? Would He turn this man away?’

“And that was the beginning of the A.A. tradition that any man who has a drinking problem is a member of A.A. if he says so, not whether we say so.

“And now, I think that the import of this on the common welfare has already been staggering. Because it takes in even more territory than the confines of our Fellowship. It takes in the whole world of alcoholics. Their charter to freedom, to join A.A., is assured. Indeed, it was an act in the general welfare.”

From the G.S.O. Archives

Five new individual photos are now available from the G.S.O. Archives. These 8x10 black and white photos consist of Bill W. and Lois W. standing in their garden at Stepping Stones; Bill playing the violin; Bill at the 1955 General Service Conference with a copy of the Second Edition of the Big Book; Dr. Bob leaning against his car; and Father Ed Dowling.

These photos are available to A.A. members and groups only for use within the Fellowship. It is the policy of the General Service Office Archives to maintain the anonymity of all members, living or deceased, including our cofounders, at the level of public media. There is a suggested contribution of $2.75 for each photograph to help defray the costs of printing and shipping. To request any of these photos, please contact the G.S.O. Archives at 212-870-3400 or by e-mail at archives@aa.org.

The G.S.O. Archives needs your help...

We are looking for a 1973 General Service Conference Manual. A manual is given to each Conference member for use at the Conference and includes data such as the Conference agenda, committee rosters, board reports, G.S.O./GV reports and presentations. Please check your archives or ask past delegates or other members in your area. We would be happy to receive a copy of the manual or the original if you are willing to donate it to the G.S.O. Archives.
